Any other suggestions/ observations, if any- ① Training on an individual experimental set up would have given enough ~~an~~ instrument exposure and would indeed have led to a better focussed understanding of single equipment. For that purpose, groups could be divided streamwise & necessity wise.

This would have ensured an initial understanding of theoretical as well as machinery

The idea behind was good and a good environment for research discussion, but as the title suggest training program, the number of hours for Lecture were a lot more than the actual training on machine. The ratio for classes : training Instrument was 3:1 which needs to be improved. Hands on training was like a Video tutorial only.
